How AI can Impact Chemistry in the Age of Large Models

Marwin Segler

Microsoft Research AI for Science, Microsoft Research Ltd, Cambridge CB1 2FB, UK
marwin.segler@gmail.com

Modern machine learning has become a powerful tool in computational chemistry over the past years, allowing to tackle previously very hard problems. In this talk, we will highlight recent developments to address the crucial steps in the design-make-test-analyse cycle as well as synthetic chemistry using generative and predictive machine learning. Finally, we will discuss the increasing role of large language models, and the importance of end to end workflows.